

Kenneth Fields is known for his intellect, drive, and integrity, approaching every case with the intention of out-preparing the opposition and representing his clients aggressively and honorably.

Kenneth Fields' practice ranges from corporate law to litigation. He represents financial institutions, business entities, governmental entities, and families involved in agricultural, oil, and gas production.

Kenneth Fields prides himself on helping people in difficult circumstances with successful results including reversing a client's capital murder conviction, rescuing women and children from abusive domestic situations, helping clients with estate planning, navigating complicated oil and gas leasing and surface use matters, and resolving title and probate issues.

His strong interest in language, history, literature, politics, and government paired with his dedication to representing his clients with integrity allows him to come up with creative legal strategies for his clients facing complex situations.

OUTSIDE THE OFFICE

Kenneth Fields has many passions outside of the law, including remembering and preserving important historical events and items. He spent a quarter of a century, and made three trips to Papua New Guinea, in connection with recovering a World War II B-17 Flying Fortress bomber from his father's squadron, which was intact in a New Guinea swamp. That aircraft is now on display in a seaplane hangar on Ford Island at Pearl Harbor, Oahu. He has also engaged in many historical reenactments, including, as a Confederate infantryman, reenacting the battles of Gettysburg and Appomattox; as a US Cavalry Trooper, reenacting Red River War Battles at Adobe Walls, Buffalo Wall, and Palo Duro Canyon, and other Texas Panhandle sites. He is also a Life Member of the Commemorative Air Force and created the CAF American Combat Airman Hall of Fame. He Co-Chaired it for 14 years and honored Americans who fought for freedom in the air services with a particular emphasis on World War II veterans.

He has been a Ruling Elder, Trustee, and Clerk of Session for the Pampa First Presbyterian. He also raises purebred Polled Hereford cattle on land held by his family for more than 112 years.
